

John, our wonderful site manager, is spending the school holidays repairing and rebuilding our outdoor learning and play environment. It's looking great, and he's got more planned!

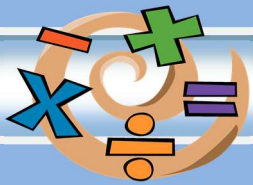

We're reviewing our relationships and behaviour policy this year, to make sure that our children and staff are all working together to make sure behaviour is good, and that we manage it with kindness.

We've got lots of great training planned for this year for our staff team; we'll be working with experts to make sure our Nursery is the best that it can be. Watch this space for updates!

We're working hard to make our indoor learning environment as attractive and inspiring as possible.

What are we doing to improve our school this year?

We want to make sure that we're getting communication with our parents absolutely right, and we'd love your help with this one. We'll send out parent surveys so you can let us know what we need to do better and please let our brilliant office team know if you have any ideas!

We want to make sure that our curriculum is exciting and interesting, and that it inspires all the children in our care to be curious and excited about their learning. We'll be looking at the books we use for our themes and making sure that the children love the books and all the activities that we'll be planning to enhance the learning. We'd love to hear your ideas too!

We have some highly skilled practitioners at the Nursery, and they're going to be sharing their skills in observing and interacting with children. Our new staff are going to be learning from them!

There are increasing numbers of children with complex needs across our city, and we're going to be working hard to make sure that we're able to meet everyone's needs well at Nottingham Nursery. We'll be working with specialists to spot those children that might need extra help, and we'll be working with our parents to make sure that we get that support right.

Being able to read and enjoy reading is the most important life skill for all people, so we're going to be working hard to make sure all our children love reading books.

Keeping our children safe is the most important part of our job, along with teaching and learning. We'll be doing lots of safeguarding training this year, along with First Aid and other important safety training. We have more closure days arranged than usual, but this training is really important.
